ANTARCTIC ADVENTURE

Paragraph 1

As Tony Bullimore, an experienced yachtsman, stood alone on his boat at the beginning of the Vendee Globe round-the-world race, he was impatient to get going. Being at the start line on this cold winter's day was a moment that he had waited for for five years; this was the race that he had always wanted to win, and he was looking forward to the 35,000 km voyage that lay ahead.

Paragraph 2

Within five days, he was back at the start because he had lost half of his fuel. The boat was repaired, and he set off again, determined to catch up with the others. He continued to have bad luck and problems with his equipment - his satellite communication system broke down, which meant that he was unable to receive weather forecasts.

Paragraph 3

By New Year's Day, however, he had made excellent progress and was in the Southern Ocean, only 900 miles north of Antarctica. Over the next few days, the weather began to change, and he felt sure that a storm was coming. He was right. The seas continued to get rougher and the winds grew stronger. When he was hit by the full force of the storm, the winds were blowing so strongly that the waves were as high as six-storey buildings. He tried to steer the boat out of the storm for ten hours, but as night began to fall, the exhausted yachtsman decided to go below.

Paragraph 4

As he was sitting in the cabin, he suddenly heard a deafening noise and the whole boat turned upside down. He found himself standing on the ceiling, but unhurt. He held on and waited for the boat to turn back over, but in the long silence that followed, he began to realize what had happened. The keel, which helps to keep the boat the right way up, had broken off. The boat was not going to turn over.

Paragraph 5

Worse was to come. As day began to dawn, he heard the noise of something tapping against the big window below him. Suddenly, the window broke and the sea came rushing in. The lights went out and he could only wait and see if the water would fill the boat. It stopped at waist level, leaving him soaked but with enough air to survive for the time being.

Paragraph 6

He climbed up onto a shelf and began to think of some way of getting out. He tried to stay calm and hopeful - maybe a ship would pass by, and someone would notice the boat and send for help. But he knew he did not have long; although there were supplies of food on the boat, they were out of reach, and there was no way he could get to them.

Paragraph 7

By the third day, the cold and dark were making him feel very tired. He thought of his wife and friends and admitted to himself that there was little chance he would ever see them again. But then, just as he was beginning to lose hope, he heard the noise of a helicopter. Soon afterwards he could hear footsteps above him and the sound of a human voice. He shouted out that he was still alive and was coming out. He dived down into the icy cold water that imprisoned him and swam deep to get clear of the boat.

Paragraph 8

When he came up to the surface, he saw his rescuers from the Australian Air Force. As they pulled him into the rubber boat, Tony Bullimore looked at the man who was helping him and joked 'If you didn't have a beard, I'd kiss you.' Everyone laughed, and that wonderful moment was captured by TV cameras and sent round the world.

Recently, a lot of holidaymakers have been commenting that the main point of travelling is the feeling of solitude and independence that it brings. They appreciate deserted places, far from busy resorts, which are packed with tourists, choosing instead to organise their free time on their own: planning the itinerary, booking the accommodation and being their own personal guide on their holiday adventure. (96)_____ They are perfect for anyone who doesn't have the time or patience to organise their trips but who, nevertheless, wants to experience something new.

Taking an organised tour will certainly save time. There is no need to surf the internet in order to compare hotel prices, flights and other means of transport. You don't even need to buy a guidebook. (97)_____ Do you think that a guided tour is more expensive than an independent holiday? Nothing could be further from the truth. (98)_____ Why? Because a tour agent knows the cheapest places in the region and can negotiate a group rate with local companies for events and meals.

Organised tours are also safer. Some places can't be visited by individual travellers unless they are accompanied by a licensed group leader. These include trips to mountain caves or participating in a night safari. Guides are trained not only to share interesting information, but also to make sure the trip goes smoothly and safely. (99)_____ They always keep their finger on the pulse. The only thing you have to do is relax and enjoy your tour.

If you are not convinced yet, think about the people you may meet. Guided tours are designed for groups of similar ages, passions or backgrounds. (100)_____ All you have to do before your departure is find a reliable tour operator that organises guided tours in the country you would like to visit.

- A Just add up all the costs to see that this is not the case.
- B However, it would be a good idea for everyone to go on a guided tour at least once in their life.
- C You will support the local economy as well.
- D The tour guide knows everything about the region you want to explore, as well as the best accommodation options.
- E You'll end up sharing your holiday experiences with one another and are likely to go back home with a whole new bunch of friends.
- F They are trained to solve problems and deal with any difficult or dangerous situation, including medical emergencies.
