Thai boys rescued from cave

10th of July 2018

1. Divers have rescued all of the 13 people that were trapped in a flooded cave network in Northern Thailand. The last of the 12 boys and their coach were brought out after 17 days underground, and are all "skinny but well". The challenging rescue mission that got everyone safely out of the caves.
2. The boys from the "Wild Boars" football team, aged 11 to 16, went into the caves with their 25 year-old coach on the 23rd of June. They then became trapped underground in the Tham Luang caves, after heavy rain blocked the exit. For nine days they were missing, but were found alive last week by two British divers, sitting on a muddy slope inside the cave.
3. Rescuers were able to begin the operation at 10am on Sunday, after lots of water was hurriedly pumped out the cave. The journey was extremely demanding, to get to and from where the boys were trapped took 11 hours, which was exhausting even for experienced divers. The rescue team of 90 divers - 40 from Thailand and 50 from other countries - guided the boys in darkness through small passages underwater towards the entrance of the caves.
4. The boys themselves wore full face masks, which are much easier for new divers to use. Two divers helped each boy get out of the cave and carried their air supply.
5. A former Thai navy diver, Saman Gunan, died in the caves on a mission to provide the group with air tanks. This showed how dangerous the rescue was. He ran out of oxygen on the way back and passed out. His diving partner was not able to save him.

6. The group showed great strength while in the cave. They wrote letters to their families which divers carried out of the caves, telling them not to worry. They were also were looking forward to tasty food, hoping that they would get out soon. After their supplies ran out they survived in the caves by licking drops of water from the walls. They meditated not to move too much in the cave so they didn't waste their energy.

7. To show respect for the families of the boys who were still trapped in the caves, the names of the boys who were rescued first were not given to the media. They were also not allowed to see their families immediately, because of the risk of infection.

China's new rules allow kids on video games just 3 hours a week

People in China under the age of 18 will only be allowed to play video games between 8pm and 9pm on Fridays and weekends, under new rules introduced this week. Chinese authorities associate time spent gaming with addiction.

China has a history of making dramatic moves aimed at cutting down children's gaming time. In 2019 a cyber curfew restricted game play at night and forced players to make their real names and identification numbers visible when playing. Some parents have sent kids to military-style anti-gaming camps.

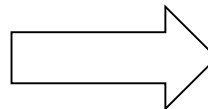

However, the way the World Health Organization defines addictive gaming disorder is different. It's not about time, it's more about the attitude and intensity a person brings to the gaming. Addiction means being obsessed to the point where other things in life are falling down due to the gaming.

Research by dr Joanne Orlando from Western Sydney University, which has involved speaking to many children about their gaming, suggests most kids are drawn to gaming chiefly because it is a way to hang out with friends. And even when strict rules are introduced, many kids will try very hard to find a way around them.

How to recognise gaming addiction

True gaming addiction affects only a small number of people - around 0.3 to 1% of the population. The WHO says to be diagnosed with gaming addiction, a person needs to demonstrate all three of these symptoms for at least 12 months: losing control over how much you're gaming; prioritizing gaming over other activities and interests; continuing to game despite negative effects on school, family life, work, health, hygiene, relationships, finances or social relationships.

So as long as these things aren't happening, spending time gaming isn't found to be harmful in the long run. In fact, some studies are showing the benefits of gaming on children's well-being. One study showed that people who gamed regularly as children are better at memory tasks as adults.

Introducing the rule outside China?

Some parents may be considering implementing the same rule in their own home, but research shows most older kids will find ways to tackle this problem. They may game at odd hours, when parents are not watching or disguise their gaming as other online work.

Yes, parents need to set boundaries around gaming. It should not be 24/7. It's healthy to have rules around when they can play, how long they can play and the types of games allowed. Children often say they are drawn to gaming because they feel there's nothing else to do at home. So parents should think about creating space for other activities kids can do at home. If you can, do some non-screen family activities that may help give the child a more diverse diet of playtime.

And lastly, parents should be aware of their own screen time. Kids can perceive rules restricting gaming time as hypocritical if the parent themselves spends a lot of time watching TV or on their phone.
