INCIDENT OUTSIDE THE CAFE ROYAL

Paragraph 1

Colonel Mathurin was one of the greatest experts in crime: he had committed, amongst countless other horrific crimes, a daring bank robbery in Detroit, which had involved the violent death of the bank manager. It was generally believed by the police that Rossiter, who was behind several bank frauds in Melbourne, was none other than the notorious Mathurin. For some years, the mysterious criminal had successfully avoided capture. As a matter of fact, few people could have identified him if they had met him face to face. One of the very few who would have known him was the Detroit bank manager whom he had shot with his own hand and murdered before the very eyes of his fiancée, so the story of how he was eventually arrested and convicted is a strange one.

Paragraph 2

It was about half past one, on a bright and pleasant day, that a young woman was driving slowly down Regent Street in a taxi. Just outside the Café Royal, she noticed several men standing on the steps and immediately recognized one of them. 'Stop here,' she said to the taxi driver, 'I've changed my mind.' The taxi driver drew up to the kerb. There was a hint of an American accent in her voice as she paid the fare and thanked the driver, giving him an excellent tip. The woman followed the men into the restaurant and sat down at a nearby table. 'Excuse me, Madam,' said the waiter, 'This table is set for four. Would you mind...?' 'I guess I'll stay where I am,' said the woman, pressing a large banknote into the waiter's hand.

Paragraph 3

After ordering a cold drink, the woman asked the waiter for a sheet of writing paper and her bill. When they arrived, the woman wrote a few lines carefully on it, folded the 10 paper and put it in her purse, which she then put in her pocket. A few minutes later, one of the men she had followed into the restaurant paid his bill and started walking towards the exit. She hurriedly followed him. The man halted for a moment on the steps outside the café. Suddenly, the woman, who was now standing close behind him, slipped her hand into his jacket pocket, pulled out his wallet and put it in her own handbag. The man quickly swung round and felt in his pocket. The doorman, who had witnessed the whole incident, ran after the woman and stopped her. He invited her to come back and explain to the man what had happened. A policeman appeared on the scene and she was asked, together with the man she had robbed, to accompany him to the nearest police station.

Paragraph 4

The woman firmly denied that she had been guilty of committing any crime and was led off to a room for an interview with a female police officer. The moment the door was closed, the woman took the man's wallet out of her pocket and laid it on the table. 'Now,' she said. 'Take my purse out of my handbag and read the note inside, it.' The police officer looked rather puzzled but did as she was told. On the sheet of paper which the waiter had given her, the woman had written these words, which the officer read out.

Paragraph 5

I am going to steal this man's wallet as this is the best way of getting him to a police station without violence. He is Colonel Mathurin, alias Rossiter, and he is wanted in Detroit, Melbourne and London. Be careful as you arrest him - he is armed and dangerous. I am a member of the New York Police Department - Nora Van Snoop. 'Show that to your boss. Straight away!' said Miss Van Snoop. The officer disappeared and returned almost immediately with the inspector. 'But how do you know? Can you be so sure?' asked the inspector.

Paragraph 6

'Good heavens!' cried Miss Van Snoop. 'Didn't I see him shoot Will Stevens with my own eyes? And didn't I join the police just to hunt him down?' The inspector left. An angry shout was heard outside. Five minutes later he returned. 'I think you're right,' he said. 'We've found enough significant evidence on him to identify him. But why didn't you hand him over to the police in the restaurant?' 'I wanted to arrest him myself,' said Miss Van Snoop, 'and I have.' With that, she sank into a chair and started sobbing, 'Oh, Will.'

Half an hour later she telephoned the head of the New York Police Department and handed in her resignation. She had, after all, accomplished what she had set out to do!
