REDUCING WASTE IN THE HOME

In our article Wasting our world we said that here, in the UK, we are responsible for throwing away about 20% of the food and 30% of the clothes that we buy. Here are some of the many emails we have received, in which readers told us how they've been changing their habits.

A. AISHA

I'm definitely going to read information on food more carefully. Too much food in our house gets wasted, either because it's out of date or because it can't be frozen. That will have to change! I buy dresses and tops that don't cost much and have to replace them after only a short time. Your article convinced me that I should get better quality goods – they'll cost more, but they'll last much longer. It's great that supermarkets are making more effort to use less plastic, but it's still not enough. I don't see why things like fruit and vegetables need to be covered in anything at all. Another thing that annoys me are all the free newspapers and advertising material that comes through my door. I used to put it all in the bin, but it's such a waste, so I complained to the local council. Things will never change unless people do something about it. I agree that people should give possessions they don't want any more to charity shops. Then other people might use them. I intend to buy birthday presents there in the future. My house is full of books I'll never read again! I've started inviting friends round for coffee every month to discuss what we've been reading and to swap books. It's a great way to save resources because we don't keep buying new ones. And we have a lot of fun too!

B. TOM

Your article reminded me of all the things we've bought for the kitchen and garden that we hardly ever use. I've now decided to buy something only if we're sure we'll often use it. Otherwise, I'll borrow or hire it instead. My son makes fun of me for always switching off the lights and turning down the heating, but it's his future that I'm worried about. We'll soon have problems if we go on wasting electricity.

C. LUCY

After reading the article I realised I had far too many clothes, but I've always felt guilty about throwing things away. Your suggestion to take anything I don't wear to charity shops was really good, and I got rid of a lot of things. I can now decide what to wear for work much more quickly, because there's much less in my wardrobe! When I need to buy more clothes, I'll look round charity shops. I saw that they have plenty of really good things that people don't want any more. I know there's been a lot of media attention about the environmental danger of plastic bags and bottles, and I agree. However, what worries me far more is the issue of electricity. I'm always asking my husband to use less hot water and turn the heating down, but he thinks it's just about the bills. He doesn't seem to realise how important it is for the environment.

D. ANDY

I hate waste – I even get annoyed when I have to throw away the sections of the newspaper that I don't read! Your article made me realise how much food our family wastes – we buy far too much and end up throwing loads away. So we've agreed to plan what we're going to cook in the next few days, and spend some time making a list of the ingredients we need, instead of just grabbing things off the shelves. It will save us time and money when we're shopping. And, after reading your advice, I made an effort to find people who could repair several pieces of equipment, from tennis rackets to old computers. I didn't want to throw them away, so they were all in the garage. I'm delighted that we can now use them again! I've also made up my mind to change the way I buy gifts for people, because it's such a waste when they just end up in a cupboard. It's much better to give people fun days out, such as tickets for the theatre or an exhibition.
